Saudi Arabia is an absolute monarchy, and has no legally binding written constitution. However, in 1992, the Basic Law of Saudi Arabia was adopted by royal decree. The Basic Law outlines the responsibilities and processes of the governing institutions but is insufficiently specific to be considered a constitution.

Legal system of Saudi Arabia - Wikipedia

The Basic Law of Saudi Arabia is a constitution-like charter divided into nine chapters, consisting of 83 articles. The constitution of Saudi Arabia is "the Holy Qur'an, and the Sunna " of the Islamic prophet Muhammad, but the Basic Law contains many characteristics of what might be called a constitution in other countries. The Basic Law is in accordance with the Wahhabi understanding of Sharia and does not override Islamic laws.

Basic Law of Governance - Embassy of Saudi Arabia in ...

Saudi Arabia is governed according to Sharia (Islamic law), but the Basic Law that articulates the government's rights and responsibilities was introduced in 1992-1993. The official constitution was adopted by Royal decree of King Fahd. I believe this is an english translation. Under international pressure (mostly from the US), the Saudi Arabian government announced it will implement further democratic reforms as of 2003, but it is yet to see how this will affect the government.
